Scope and Content:
The University publications cover the years 1898 to present (2012). The material consists of publications created for both internal and external information purposes. It includes catalogs, student handbooks, commencement materials, and various newsletters for students, employees, and alumni. Publications by students such as class and club newsletters and yearbooks are included. Series are arranged chronologically.

Description of Series:
I. Catalogs (1898-2008), 2 lin. ft.
Catalogs describe the course of study, prerequisites, school facilities, faculty, and costs for prospective students. Some contain lists of required textbooks. Early catalogs include biographical sketches of faculty and explanations of osteopathy, its development, and legal status. Catalogs from 1928 to 1964 are also available bound in four volumes (stored alongside boxed catalogs.)

II. Student Handbooks (1969-200?), 1 lin. ft.
Handbooks contain specific information for students about facilities, services, and personnel. Many include maps and personnel directories. Later editions are program specific and include student academic policies.

III. Commencement (1899-2010), 1 lin. ft.
Invitations, announcements, programs from commencement ceremonies and Senior Week activities are included. Commencement programs list graduates. Early years may only have a photo copy of a graduation list, taken from the original commencement program.
Incomplete.
IV. Newsletters (1898-present), 4 lin. ft.
General public health and University information initially used to inform the public about osteopathy and its relation to science and medical education was issues in the form of a scientific journal, the “Cosmopolitan Osteopath”. This later became a newspaper format directed to faculty, students, alumni, and friends of the University, “The Log Book”, “COMS Newsletter”, “Nexus”, “Chronical”, and “DMU Magazine”. A few copies of the “Log Book can also be found in the personal papers of Herbery Gearhart and Howard Graney. “The Log Book” was first published February 1, 1923 and varied from semi-monthly to monthly to quarterly in frequency. It is available on CD, online at library.dmu.edu and in both bound and loose volumes.

Internal newsletters for all University employees were occasionally published in addition to the general information publications. Specific departments also occasionally publish their own newsletters. Born-digital documents are saved in their original file format (usually .doc or .pdf) and retained on the archivist’s hard drive. Print-outs of these born-digital documents are also retained.

V. Miscellaneous Publications (c1980-present), 1 lin.ft.
Includes general advertising, publications for special events such as the University Centennial and Founders’ Day, and health information for the public from various University departments.

VI. Yearbooks (1905-2001), 8 lin. ft.
Students published yearbooks under various names – “The Nucleous”, “The Cardiograph”, “The Stillonian”, and “Pacemaker”. The first appeared in 1905 and includes a good history of the College. It was not published continuously and there are known gaps in the 1930s and from 1940-1958. The 1939 yearbook includes an alumni directory. It ceased publication in 2000. A smaller version of a yearbook/memory book was issued in 2001. Yearbooks contain photographs of faculty members as well as students, photographs of club members, photographs of special activities, and occasionally alumni lists. It also includes advertisements from area businesses, local osteopaths, osteopathic hospitals, and other supporting organizations.

Yearbooks are stored separately. The series is arranged chronologically.

VII. Student Publications (1964-2009), 1 lin ft.
Students have also published newsletters for the whole student body reporting on Student Council activities and campus life from their prospective. This includes the student newspaper, The Inominate, which began in the 2000s and debuted 100% digital distribution in 2010, individual student club newsletters and individual class newsletters.

VIII. Alumni Newsletters (1939-2000), <1 lin. ft.
Focuses on job placement and current happenings at the University.
